Don't ever call Mark Seltman a psychic. He says that he considers himself a scientist. Dubbed the "Mozart of palm readers," Seltman contends that palm reading is based on a science that began more than 5,000 years ago in Vedic India and has evolved throughout the centuries. Palmistry entered the modern age with the works of William Benham in the early 1900s. "At one time, palmistry was even taught in the universities of Europe," says Seltman. Seltman says that his main focus is helping his clients evolve and resolve their problems. "Some readers want to impress their clients with a lot of predictions," says Seltman. "I work on a psychological level. I want my clients to walk out of a session feeling good about themselves." Seltman's clients include corporations, individuals and he specializes in reading at parties. Seltman has made some outstanding predictions, including the fall of Enron (which he did through studying the astrological chart of the company). During his 20 years in business, Seltman has studied thousands of hands. He is considered one of the best palm readers in the country and says that someday he would like to become a spokesman for the science of palmistry. "The science of palmistry is not that difficult," Seltman says. "But teaching it in a way that people will understand, now that is the challenge."
